摘要: This article reports that the regions of the Earth that have contributed least to global warming, most notably Africa, are the most vulnerable to its harmful effects. The article also explores the health dangers associated with climate change in cities and on coastal populations. Large cities experience "urban heat island effect," which can cause health problems. Coastal flooding as a result of storm surges will affect up to 200 million people by 2080. The highest risk coastlines are along the Pacific and Indian Oceans and in sub-Saharan Africa. The article also discusses the need of fast growing economies like China and India to develop sources of sustainable energy.

CLIMATE CHANGE AND DISEASE

部分:

SPECTRUM

The places that have contributed the least to warming the Earth are the most vulnerable to the death and disease higher temperatures can bring, according to a 16 November report in Nature. Health and climate scientists at the University of Wisconsin-Madison and the World Health Organization (WHO) have shown that the growing health impacts of climate change affect different regions in markedly different ways.

Africa has among the lowest per capita emissions of greenhouse gases, yet regions of the continent are at an increased risk for warming-related disease. Many of the most important diseases in poor countries, from malaria to diarrhea and malnutrition, are highly sensitive to climate," says coauthor Diarmid Campbell-Lendrum, a scientist at the WHO Department for Protection of the Human Environment. "The health sector is already struggling to control these diseases, and climate change threatens to undermine these efforts.

Large cities that experience the "urban heat island effect" are also susceptible to temperature-related health problems. Flooding as a result of coastal storm surges will affect the lives of up to 200 million people

INVITATION TO CONTRIBUTORS

The ASQ logo reads, "Dedicated to advancing the understanding of administration through empirical investigation and theoretical analysis." The editors interpret that statement to entail three criteria that affect editorial decisions. About any manuscript they ask: does this research (1) advance our understanding of organizing in contexts such as teams, enterprises, or markets; (2) develop a new theoretical account or empirical findings about organizing that challenge previous understandings; (3) address a significant and challenging problem of management? Theory is how we move to further research and improved practice, but new empirical findings that disconfirm theory are also valuable. If manuscripts contain no theoretical foundation, their value is suspect.

ASQ asks, "What's interesting here?" But we take pains not to confuse interesting work with work that contains mere novelties, clever turns of phrase, or other substitutes for insight. Instead, we try to identify counterintuitive work that disconfirms prevailing assumptions and established research. Building a coherent, cumulative body of knowledge typically involves research that offers new syntheses or themes, identifies new

Submission Guidelines

Submit manuscripts in Word format to the online ScholarOne submission system at <https://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/asq>. The site does not accept pdf files for upload. (Authors who are unable to submit anything but pdf files must contact the ASQ Editorial Office to ask a system administrator to upload those files for them. Should the article be accepted for publication, authors will have to convert pdf text files to Word for copy editing.) Upload a title page, with contact information for all authors, and be sure that all authors' names are entered into the manuscript submission form.

- A submitted manuscript should not be under review for publication in another outlet (e.g., book chapter, journal) while it is under review at ASQ. ASQ does accept submissions of papers that have been accepted for publication in much shortened form in the Academy of Management Best Papers Proceedings.
- Authors should not re-submit a manuscript that ASQ has rejected at an earlier time.
- Authors should take reasonable precautions to preserve the integrity of the blind review process and avoid potential conflicts of interest in the submission process. This includes not requesting as reviewers people who have previously seen the paper, previous or current coauthors, or colleagues at the authors' institutions. The editors are not obliged to accept the author's suggestions for preferred or non-preferred reviewers. Authors should also refrain from requesting handling editors who would have a conflict of 摘要: This article reports that the regions of the Earth that have contributed least to global warming, most notably Africa, are the most vulnerable to its harmful effects. The article also explores the health dangers associated with climate change in cities and on coastal populations. Large cities experience "urban heat island effect," which can cause health problems. Coastal flooding as a result of storm surges will affect up to 200 million people by 2080. The highest risk coastlines are along the Pacific and Indian Oceans and in sub-Saharan Africa. The article also discusses the need of fast growing economies like China and India to develop sources of sustainable energy.

Globalisation, Industrial Diversification and Productivity Growth in Large European R&D Companies

作者: Cincera, Michele; Ravet, Julien

作者单位: Free U Brussels; Free U Brussels

来源: Journal of Productivity Analysis, April 2014, v. 41, iss. 2, pp. 227-46

出版日期: April 2014

摘要: This paper aims to assess the impact of both geographic and industrial diversification of economic activities on the productivity performance of large European R&D Multinational Enterprises (MNEs). Based on the worldwide subsidiaries of these firms, we measure the performance of the firms according to their level of industrial diversification and globalisation that we proxy with the presence and importance of subsidiaries in the EU, North America and Asia-Pacific regions. The sample consists of large R&D firms that represent about 80% of total European R&D. In general, the results indicate a positive impact from globalisation on firms' R&D productivity, especially in the US, while a negative impact for industrial diversification is found.
